Dutch Evacuating 3,000; Snowstorm Hampers Work

From CP and BUP Dispatches

LONDON — Spring flood tides are rising to threaten the battered seawalls of The Netherlands, Belgium and Britain. The Dutch government has ordered police and soldiers to evacuate 3,000 persons—using force if necessary—from the devastated island of Schouwen. The Belgian government has declared a state of emergency on part of its coastal area. And thousands of servicemen and civilians are hurrying to repair the sea-walls on the east coast of Britain. The heaviest snowstorm of the winter is hampering the work.

Crisis point will be reached
Monday, when the spring tides come up to their top level.

TAVERNS AND TIPPLING

ALREADY IN THE Legislature the subject of liquor and A licenses has been introduced by several members, although, at the date of writing, the many other contentious of the proposed liquor reform report have not come formally before the House.

But, as I pointed out in a column last week, it is odd w often one is made to realize that there is little new under the sun when it comes to parliamentary debate and

ONTARIO EXAMPLE

Looking up some material in my files the other day, I came across an item, written by W. E. Brunt seven years ago in the London Free Press, recalling early days in Metcalfe, Ont., which was first settled in the 1820's. In 1846 Metcalfe was incorporated as a township, and in 1852 the first council met, thus inaugurating municipal government.

According to the Free Press article, the Metcalfe muni cipal council met in private houses or in public houses— usually the latter—in the village of Napier. I had always thought that public houses were synonymous with saloons,

In those early days, the same license was necessary in Ontario for public houses, whether called taverns, inns or figures of entertainment. But a different license applied to Saloons and liquor stores.

Oddly enough, soon after the township was incorporated the village council was faced with a situation somewhat re sembling that with which British Columbia is confronted today in regard to the sale of liquor. For among the earliest by laws passed was one which had to do with the regulation of the sale of liquor and the licensing of hotels.

ROOMS ESSENTIAL The wording of the century-old Ontario by law is not ly quaint but interesting as viewed from the perspective today's discussions. It read:

of today's discussions. "Whereas it is expedient to regulate the manner of tavern-keeping in this township, it is hereby enacted by this Council in virtue of the authority vested in it by the 13 and 14 Victoria, Chapter 65, that each person keeping a tavern or house of entertainment shall be provided with a lock-up stable or driving-house, and two separate bedrooms, besides those requisite for the use of his own family.

"And shall also keep a well-regulated rlean and orderly house." And also to observe the Sabbath and allow no tippling on that day.

"To keep hay and oats for the horses of travelers, and some careful person as ostler to be in attendance; and to be bound himself in £20; and two sureties of £10 each, for the due observance of all by laws enacted by the Municipal Council."

NO SUNDAY SALE

That old by law's stipulation about two separate bed rooms, besides those requisite for the use of the tavern-owner's own family, might well have set the pattern for British Columbia's regulations as to hotel requirements in regard to liquor outlets

And I love that bit about "no tippling" on the Sabbath day Apparently those pioneer Ontarians didn't have any false notions about "better the day, better the tipple."

Justice E. R. E. Chevrier of the Ontario Supreme Court said he might be "making legal history" in freeing Mrs. Armstrong whose trial lasted five days.

He told the jury that the law sometimes condones homicide in the case of a wife defending her husband. In this case he said the jury must consider that Mrs. Armstrong was pregnant and she gave birth to a son while under guard in hospital at Newmarket. She refused to give up her child, and mother and son were transferred to special quarters at the Don Jail.

your diamond travels down through the years, a bit of you onal history is carried along

The diamond is unique in that it is composed of a single ele-ment. It is pure crystallized carbon. The lead in your penment. It is pure crystallized carbon. The lead in your pen-cil and the charcoal over which you broil your steaks are the same element, the difference being in the manner in which the carbon atoms are arranged.

The beauty and brilliance of the first diamonds lay impris-oned behind the coating of "nyf" which covered most of the nat-ural crystals. The Indian Lapidaries were the first to dis-cover that the removal of this "skin" released much of the beauty.

The next step was to polish out surface flaws, but it was not until the 15th century A.D. that the discovery of the crilliant form of cutting gave to man the beauty which has made this gem the most cherished of all possessions. A diamond cannot be counterfeited to deceive anyone at all familiar with diamonds. It is the hardest natural substance on earth. Mr. Claude Butler of Butler Brothers is seen here on the right taking delivery of a new G.M.C. six-wheeler from Mr. George DuTemple, sales manager of Davis Motors Ltd. Butler Brothers have used General Motors vehicles exclusively since they started business in 1935. The new truck shown here is the nineteenth serving this progressive firm. G.M. stationary engines also have been selected for Butler Brothers logging operations. The rotating mixer is now in service delivering up to five yards of Ready-Mix concrete to any location on the Saanich Peninsula. Quick delivery, with this G.M.C. unit taking all the hard work out of concrete mixing, is the promise of Butler Brothers. Two locations now serve all, of Saanich-main store and plant at Keating Cross Road and another store at Four Corners, Quadra at Cloverdale.

VISIBLE LIGHT

The light that causes vision is often called the visible light. Actually there is no such thing as visible light, vision occurs only in the eyes and brain which are excited into activity by certain kinds of ether waves. The eye can adapt itself to light of both low and high intensity, but both extremes should be avoided since long exposures can be very harmful. One should not read with direct sunlight falling on the book or paper nor should one attempt to read or do fine work in dim light. Fortunately, normal eyes will stand considerable light. Fortunately, normal eyes will stand considerable abuse and continue to function. However, eyes that are not normal, and these form the vast majority, are able to stand very little abuse without impaired vision or

Members of B.C.'s Social Credit government apparently believe in Aberhart's policy of issuing "dividends," one of the platform planks on which the party was elected in 1935 in Alberta.

Fin the Legislature Friday, Randolph Harding (CCF, Kaslo-Slocan), in a biting attack on the Socreds, asked:
"Do you believe in the policy of issuing dividends?"

A chorus of "yes" came from the government benches. He was referring to the $25 dividends which William. Aberhart, then Alberta premier, promised the voters in the depression days of the thirties.

A fool for a patient

It has been said that he who treats his own illness has a fool for a patient. The wisdom is obvious. What may seem to be an insignificant ailment actually may be a warning of serious illness, especially if symptoms persist or recur. Only a physician has the ability and knowledge required to diagnose and prescribe medical treatment. Seek his attention at the first warning signal. A prolonged and serious illness may thwarted. The Risks of Blockade

A S WAS TO BE EXPECTED, President Eisenhower's policy Formosa has produced serious friction between the United States and its great European allies," who fear that Chiang Kai-shek may involve the western world in a large Chinese war. But if those allies are disturbed by the encouragement given Chiang to raid the Chinese mainland they are obviously appalled at the prospect of a blockade against

It is to be noted, in all the pres-ent confusion, that a blockade has been urged by some powerful American military men but has never been proposed by the Eisenhower government. Whether such a plan has been privately discussed between Washington, London and other capitals the public has no means of knowing But Mr. Eden has fold the British Parliament that his government has never been officially approached on the subject of a blockade. He added a highly significant and evidently calculated statement:

"We have said to the U.S. that we would think it would be a mis-take to have a policy of blockade." In the restrained language of diplomacy a British foreign secretary could go no further in warning the United States that Britain desires to have no part in a blockade. And that, unquestionably, is the attitude of the other European governments and of Canada as well. It follows that if the Eisenhower government were to attempt a blockade it would cause the gravest kind of strains in the alliance of the free world. That is precisely what Russia hopes for and expects.

The British position in this critical affair—and no doubt the posi-tion of western Europe and of Can--has been unofficially but accurately explained in the British

THE LEVEL OF ORATORY IN I the local House, which has been somewhat drab in recent years, recelved a decided fillip this week the return to the bear-garden of Mrs. Nancy Hodges.

Even her political opponents sat up on the edges of their seats when' the distinguished member for Victoria arose, to break the four-year silence imposed on her by occupancy of the Speaker's chair.

In a sentence or two, Nancy proved that the old touch was still there. With misty eyes, and expressions of profound compassion, she turned to the new Speaker and offered up perfervid thanks that he had been "spared" from the recent threat on his life; she didn't know whether this was due to the prayers of the Socreds, or the diligence of the RCMP, or "perhaps a combina-tion of both"—at any rate, Mrs. Hodge's words, dripping honeyed consideration, had the Socreds blush-

Then she turned her attention to the Hon. Tilly Rolston-but, alas! the Education Minister was not in her seat. A pity: Nancy wanted to remind her of the days when she not quite make up her mind about Social Credit, and referred to the back-benchers as "window-dressing."- Well, said Nancy, she had Britain holds that a blockade would delay any chance of ending the Korean war by broadening the conflict with China. In other words, if China is blockaded it will assume that the west does not really desire peace in Korea and will dig in for a long struggle.

Secondly, a blockade could lead to dangerous incidents involving Chinese and Russian shipping.

Thirdly, the blockade would not seriously reduce China's fighting strength, since China gets a small trickle of supplies by sea and depends on Russian supplies carried by Fourth, a blockade would antagonize such Asiatic states as India and Pakistan, which trade with China, need that trade and do not intend to abandon it to suit the United States.

Finally, if China is blockaded it might retaliate by an attack on Hong Kong, the West's only listening post on China's flank, and Hong Kong probably is indefensible short of a major war against China. In short, the United States' allies fear that Chiang, raiding the mainland coast, may involve them in such a war, though as Mr. Eden says, General Eisenhower's policy is not intended to be belligerent. If those early fears have been modified by American assurances, the next step, of outright blockade, is regarded as too dangerous to be attempted for a moment.

The greatest risk the United States would run, if it-made the attempt, would not be military but political—the risk of straining the grand alliance to the breaking point. Mr. Eden's statement must be regarded as a candid warning against such a course and there is nothing so far to show that his warning has failed. The Eisenhower government has made no move to blockade

THIS is written in the heart of the Precambrian Shield—a hard, smooth and stony heart, now deceptively cushioned by a thick white frosting like a wedding cake. If the wedding cake. If the prairies, as I men-tioned the other day, jungle of rock and black spruce, lying like a great horseshoe south of Hudson Bay is just as important, but not in the way we used to think. The Shield seems to Canada in half, interposing a barren and worthless region between the rich lands of the St. Lawrence valley and the western plains. As one looks out the train window today on the rocks and little starveing trees it is impossible to agine that such land is any use to any body but a few wolves and rabbits. And so, up to recent times, it was always re-garded—a kind of fatal fault in the substance of the nation, a total liability, a dead weight on the national economy and interesting only to a school of Canadian painters who found a grim beauty in its rounded contours and steel-blue sky.

BUT, like most things in Canada, the Shield has not turned out as expected. There is much more than beauty

When the molten substance of this continent cooled off some considerable time ago the horseshoe of rock riding above the surface of a steaming sea contained certain substances of no value to man until he became civilized, until he invented money, for instance, and needed gold for his purposes, until he invented atomic bombs and needed uranium. And was gradually realized that the Shield, instead of being a liability, was in fact a treasury, recently opened by

THUS, like the soft prairie earth, these harsh rocks have become one of the basic factors of the great Canadian boom. The curious thing, however, as one discovers even in a casual trip across the country, is that the Canadian people at large hardly appreciate the size of the boom and their humor is skeptical and Unquestionably they are, without possible exception, sible exception, the most fortunate people in the world but they refuse to admit-it. They are envied by all other peoples, including even the richer Americans, yet to hear the talk of capitalists, labor unions, farmers and the general run of our citizenry you would think that we are having a very hard and trying e. And there are plenty of politicians left and right to tell us that we are really on the ragged edge of ruin.

A NOTE OF HARMONY IN THE NOISE

Ships, Guns and a Little Coke Train

ON Feb. 2 President Eisenhower, in his address to Congress shouted "For-mosa!" But all this week the echoes answered, "Blockade! Blockade!"

The idea arose in military and naval circles as a result of the president's move in ordering the Seventh Fleet to cease protection of Chiang Kai-shek's headquarters on Formosa. It was taken up in political quarters and by the press Within a day or two the hot debate had spread to international dimensions. Briefly, the proposal was that United States naval forces should stop all seagoing traffic to the shores of Communist China. This, it was argued, would halt the movement of supplies which ultimately could be used against UN troops in Korea. On this basis it seemed

But, as in most international actions, the implications were far greater. Only a small proportion of Red China's war supplies is imported by sea; most come overland from Russia. Red China has few ships, consequently most vessels stopped by blockading forces would be of nations friendly to the United

MORE TO COME

The proposal appeared to involve great risks for limited benefit. But there vas more to come.

Britain and France took immediate issue with the proposal. Foreign Secre-tary Anthony Eden was particularly outpoken in opposition. Such a policy would be a "mistake" he told Parliament. Labor members said Britain should have -should, oppose it in every way

In Ottawa, External Affairs Minister. Lester Pearson warned against opening up new areas of conflict and drew attention to possible repercussions from Asiatic countries now friendly to the West who would take a poor view of disruption of their necessary trade with China.

The chances of a new shooting war as a result of blockade were enormous; of a possible breach among the allies equally great. But China's coastline was not the only threat to peace. The equally turbu-lent border line of West Berlin also echoed with the cry of "Blockade!" In mid-week East German communists as-serted they would seal off the western section of the capital if the Bonn government proceeded with plans to ratify the European defense pact.

West Berlin itself is an island of de mocracy in a sea of communism. Adja-cent to the Russian-dominated eastern sector of the former Reich capital, and lying wholly within the eastern zone of Germany, the outpost is accessible only by certain specified highways and rail routes, and by aircraft flights along spe-cified corridors from the West.

WEST BERLIN

Once before, in 1948, West Berlin was blockaded. It survived the ordeal at tremendous cost and effort through the air lift. That could be done again, but the dangers of a clash would be intensified. Another Berlin blockade would provide an open provocation with grim possi-Obilities.

Meanwhile, despite the threat, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer continued with defense treaty. The agreement would weld West Germany into the western European system, provide it with mili-tary forces to enable it to take part in the joint defensive establishment. Ade-nauer had twice postponed the test at Bonn, but now set March 10-15 as the time of trial. Here, at the risk of danger lay the hope of security.

But a more optimistic note was echoed, too, this week. It was a quieter sound almost unheard in the rattling of sabres and the pounding of diplomatic desks. But it was a sound that might endure long after the noisier display of international clashes. It was a note of harmony, the antithesis of blockade The Schuman Plan came into active opera-little coke train set off from German soil and ran into France with its sooty freight. That was all. But it had never happened that way before, for the cars rolled along the rails as though no fron-tier were present. There was no customs barrier, no "Douanes" to pass. A new era in European affairs had dawned.

SCHUMAN PLAN

The Schuman Plan had been in development for two years and three months. The brain child of Jean Monmonths: net and Robert Schuman of France, it provided for a six-nation economic community in which the steel and coal industries would be pooled. Production and distribution of these vital resources would be jointly administered and carried on for the benefit not of any one partner but of the combined population of 150,000,000.

France, Italy, West Germany, Belm, Holland and Luxembourg found agreement, and set an example that could have world-wide consequences.

On Feb. 10, 1953, little noted in the press or anywhere else, the governing authority of the Plan issued its first der, abolishing tariffs and all forms of trade discrimination as regards coal, on ore and steel. Within two hours the move in a process that will take several years for full implementation.

Operation of the plan in these limited fields should point the way to other opportunities, not only in trade but in wider economic policy, in agriculture, in social measures, in political develop-ment. A peacefully co-operating com-munity of Western Europe came a step closer to realization.

WEDNESDAY CLOSING

I regret very much that your reporter, an othewise excellent article, received the erroneous reaction to the remarks made by me as a member of the Tourist Trade Group of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce with reference to an open I did not intend to convey any reference to whether or not the executives of Woodwards Limited and other depart-mental stores received their salaries regardless of whether or not their places of business were open on Wednesday afternoon. What I did intend to convey was that the large departmental stores had complex labor problems that the small shops luckily escape.

My contention was simply that if the large departmental stores did not care to remain open on Wednesday afternoon that was their concern, although, at the same time, I consider that other shops, depending on their desire to do business, should be given the opportunity of remaining open. For that reason I was to support Alderman Brent Murdoch in his resolution which was car

KIND THOUGHTFULNESS I would like to convey through your paper my sincere thanks to the many friends and neighbors in Central Saanich and Royal Oak for the dance given for my benefit on Feb. 7. Their kind thoughtfulness is deeply appreciated. MRS H MCRIENEY

Wedded to Her Principles . . .

Your editorial of February 7 "Having Fought for Margarine," asks for an ex-planation of the Hon. Mrs. Tilly Rolston's position on the proposed ban of all vege table oils used in the manufacture of "synthetic ice cream, canned milk and other commodities" competitive with milk. Incidentally as these same vege-table oils are used in the manufacture of margarine, the proposal is as para as mixing free enterprise with Social Credit.

Your question is whether Mrs. Rolston, as a woman of principle, will once more nail the golden flag of synthetic dairy products to the consumers' mast and oppose legislation which, according to Dr. D. L. Macfarlane, the professor of economies at McGill, "does confer monopoly power on producers' boards, which can, and perhaps already has been used against the consumer.

As minister of education, a person of lesser character than Mrs. Rolston might claim that the explanation you ask for is entirely outside her jurisdiction. But as a woman and a representative of voters who pin their confidence to her entered the picture many centuries later: principles rather than to her political faith or economic understanding, she might point out to her present associates in the legislature, that the Social Credit Association of Canada believes that wherever a virtual or real monopoly exists or threatens, and it appears im-possible to induce effective individual competition, we favor government enter prise strictly on a competitive basis, only when necessary in the public interest for the purpose of breaking antisocial monopoly control."

As minister of agriculture, and therefore presumably primarily responsible for trying to navigate the government between the Scylla of "parity" and the Charybdis of "charity," the Hon. W. K. Kiernan might counter this feminine approach by stating that the Social Credit Association of Canada advocates the stabilization of agriculture by estab-"home market constantly sup plied with effective purchasing power with a price discount technique for in-suring a fair price to producers without causing inflation;" and that produce is be sold under a two-price system internal based upon parity; (b) external, based on what can be obtained in competitive markets or through international agreements; to work in con-junction with an International Commod-ity Clearing House;" and "in event of price being below parity the Social Canadian government to make difference." (Note: Passing the up the difference. buck to the Canadian government.)

ter of education and a "female of the species more dangerous than the male," could ask Mr. Kiernan what is meant by a "price discount technique?" to decide on what is a "fair price to producers?" of whom their own eco-nomic counseler, Dr. Clarke, stated before a public meeting "375 out of 400" had different costs of production; and how does Mr. Kiernan define "parity? In the final analysis the Hon. Tilly Rolston, as Kipling suggests:

"Is wedded to her principles; a plain and simple fact Like 'discount techniques,' worry her, in a legislative act. vixt 'parity' and 'purchase price,'

Man wobbles for support; While a woman's social credit brings her safely home to port."

Woodpeckers, Jays, Blue Grouse and Others

Came to the Coastal Forests, and Stayed

By these routes came certain birds spread into the newly opened area and to become permanent residents Among the first to arrive from the interior was the hairy woodpecker which has since given rise ral subspecies each occupying a different section of the coast. The smaller down woodpecker, too, was an early immigrant from the east and is now well spread.

The American three-toed woodpecker also came to the coast at this time but has since become restricted to the high country with the subsequent tempering of the climate.

The blue grouse moved northward at first, following the recession of the ice and thus came to occupy areas east of the coast mountains which were possibly available earlier than coastal country in the same latitude.

They too moved coastward through the passes as soon as these routes became opened. Their arrival must have been early for since that time several subspecies have been evolved.

Steller's jay, a bold, noisy member of the crow family, apparently also came from the south via the interior of the mainland. As in the case of the gro these birds pushed northward as soon as land became habitable then moved to the coast. The westward route take of the coast at the mouth of this river are still identical with those of the interior of the province.

Jays which spread along the coast north and south from this dispersal cen tre eventually populated the whole area and, on some of the islands and adjacent land areas, isolated populations eventu-ally gave rise to recognizable subspecies. Thus a very dark jay now is found on the Queen Charlotte Islands and the Van couver Island jay and the jays of the nearby mainland differ from this dark subspecies and differ from each other in color and other small details.

But not all the movements through ie east-west routes were from the interior to the coast, for some bird species. ved in the opposite direction.

Thus the coastal song sparrow ar red-breasted sap-sucker pressed far inland through these highways meeting no closely related forms as competition. red-shafted flicker, too, moved into the interior where it invaded territory already occupied by the yellow-shafted species. While on the subject of films, it is fair to say that this medium is finally being put to good use by religious organizations. The movies being shown at the Fox Theatre by the Christian Business Men's Committee are serving a great purpose, and the missionary film "The King's Men." which was shown at Fairfield and Oak Bay United churches this week, is an outstanding job technically, as well as an honest and moving treatment of missionary work in Africa. Those interested in missions should not miss it. It will be shown Sunday night in First United Church.

Penny Mines Still Strong At Toronto

BY HARRY KINGDON

Canadian Press Staff Writer The "penny boom" on the Toronto stock exchange proved this week that it isn't dead yet. Heavy speculative trading in low-priced mining stocks reversed the downward trend that followed late January's record activity. More than 8,000,000 shares were traded Friday.

Companies with northern Saskatchewan uranium properties and those with holdings in the base metal area of New Brunswick were the mainsprings of the January boom that saw 12,000,000 shares traded in one day. They drew most speculative interest again this week.

Shawkey Mines traded almost 1.000,000 shares during the week, jumped from 14 cents to 36 cents and then slipped back to 16 cents. Behind the upward movement was a rumor that the company had acquired uranium property. The company denied

The rest of Canada's lumbermen, however, sold only 17.1 per cent of their output in the States. These are some of the lumber marketing trends behind an all-out drive by B.C. timber producers to boost sales in the U.S. and eastern Canada. "The Trend Is To Western Woods." That's the slogan to be hammered home when the forest industries of B.C. embark this spring on an intensive half-million-dollar, two-year promotional campaign to secure a larger share of Canada's construction dollar. The	Sult of decision taken at the pre- Christmas Commonwealth eco nomic conference, gold would be revalued upwards. It also was said that the United States and Canada, out of the profits they realize on their gold hold ings, would underwrite propor tionately a fund to support the pound sterling and make it readily convertible with the dollar at about its present valu- ation. Government economists dis- claimed all knowledge of any such arrangement. But they conceded that action along those lines would be "interesting, pos- sible and not illogical." Treasury sources make a practice of neither denying nor confirming rumors of changes in currency valuations.	Another straw regarded as showing the way the wind is blowing is a move by New Brunswick senator A. Neil McLean to get a full-dress exploration of the possibility of treating the peacetime economic co-operation clauses of NATO as no less important than the treaty's military clauses. McLean has asked the senate for a comprehensive investigation by the standing committee on trade and commerce. The idea is that representatives of the NATO powers, of the commonwealth, and of the trading nations of the free world should appear before the investigation and poll their views on how freer international trade may be brought about. An overwhelming quantity of irrefutable evidence, which will be presented in due course, is available to support this. For the nonce, we will cite the case of the former Miss Muriel Sluggett, now Mrs. Romm Knott, whose name has appeared on the ladies' doubles silverware (city) every year the tourna-ment has been held since 1934. The club, or community hall as it is better known, was remarkable is the fact that for the most part the players who shone 20 years ago still shining and as brightly as ever. The most outstanding year Brentwood has yet experi-enced; a year which merited full-page headlines such as: TLE PLAY" was in 1937, discussed the prevailing prob-lems of English soccer and the various remedies that have appeared in different English newspapers to overcome them and so make the game more attractive to the spectator.

Recently the Scottish Football Association met to debate the problems of the game in Scotland, and the apparent doldrums the game of soccer has experienced since the end of the Second World War.

To overcome the staleness within the national game, the governing body came to the conclusion that there is a lack of competent coaches, and have therefore issued invita-

this summer at Wiston Hall,

It may be recalled a similar scheme was started shortly after Second World War but, because of a shortage of sufficiently interested players, it was finally abandoned in 1951. It is interesting to note that the present coach of Victoria United, Wally Milligan, attended this course during playing days with East

Stirling. The coaching of players. especially the younger school has been a topic of discussion for years. Many officials with a lifetime of service in the

Players like Alan Morton Walker and Alex James, they argue, received little in the way of soccer tuition in their earlier years

These officials may be right to a certain degree, but what of the players of average abil ity, who are the backbone of coaching methods, coupled with diligent practice, could well raise the ordinary player into the realms approaching stardom in a short time.

In Englands the coaching system is widespread and the accent is on youth. Films play a large part in the English system, and players learn a great deal from watching their own particular tyle of play after games and practice sessions. Every one of England's present formidable national team has at some time or other been a pupil in this coaching scheme. The circular issued to Scottish professionals makes it quite clear the Scottish FA is eager to follow the lead fore appeals to players to come forward as soccer,

Toward the end of the course an examination will be given and those successful will be awarded a diploma of recognition of their ability to teach others, especially the younger element.

The course should appeal especially to players who do not have a trade or profession to turn to when their playing days are over. In England, a great many of the local education authorities are desirious of hiring ex-professionals who hold the English FA's coaching diploma for appointments given their players the chance to help put Scotland back to the top in the soccer world; let's hope they do their part.

HEE Cate Royal is a few laxy strides up Regent street from Procadily Circus. No hangout has been associated longer with the literary and artistic life of London. Back in Victorian times you could see Whistler, Wilde, Shaw, Pinero there. In World War I. I used to sit at a respectful distance and watch Wells, Chesterton, Epstein, Augustus John being witty, and winning. Lately, the Cafe Royal has gone modern. But at the time of this little yarn, it still had the old brasserie room, with the long, narrow tables, at which the famous, as well as the lowliest unknown, could sit side by side.

Beyond the brasserie, but in the same large room, were ordinary restaurant tables. At one of these, I sat with a B.B.C. announcer who was trying to teach me to speak English.

Around the big room ran a ball-cony which was also filled with tables, and where people diened when they did not want to be down in the busy did not want to be down in the busy did not want to be down in formal evening sole meuniere. The head walter dashed away and up the stairs to the balcony. In a monent, a man, holding his servicite in his hand, appeared leaning over the balcony. He was a large, ruddy, middle-aged Englishman, the type you institutely classify as a country gentleman, a squire. His eyes were large and blue. His expression was astonished, and contrite.

"I beg." he shouted down, "your partion;"

The diners at the next table remed their chairs. The waiter proceeded to serve the pheasant sous oche. My B.B.C. friend brushed off waving his serviette lightly

A Fish for Mr. Waddington

By Claire Neville Knox

ILLUSTRATED BY ED. McNALLY

R. WADDINGTON stopped raking up the brown fleeks of autumn leaves from the still-dewy grass and leaned on his rake to watch the man coming down the garden path. He was carrying a newspaper-wrapped pacel and he moved with virile cheerfulness. He doesn't, thought Mr. Waddington a bit traniorously, he doesn't look like a man whose wife won't have an ash tray or a cobweb in the house.

Mrs. Waddington interrupted his thoughts by returning with the emptided wheelbarrow.

"Are you tired, Roland"" she inquired tarity.

Mr. Waddington resumed his raking. "I was just wondering what this man wanted."

"He's just a tramp," said Mrs. Waddington in her strident voice.

"That's right, lady. Folks call me The Tramp." He shifted his parcel. "Do you want to buy a fish?" "It is strictly against the law for you to peddle fish," said Mrs. Waddingtoh.
"Real cheap, lady." "Well, I suppose it won't do any harm to take a look at it."

look at it.

The Tramp laid bare his catch. The silver sides sparked in the sun, even in their quiescence suggesting the salty tang of the sea and the freedom of untrammelled things. The fresh fishy odor touched off immories in Mr. Waddington which he believed had long ago been extinguished.

"Fifteen-pound cohoe. Three dollars and my break-

"Two dollars," said Mrs. Waddington firmly.
"And my breakfast."

"Ill. give you forty cents to get your breakfast," haggled Mrs. Waddington
"Three dollars and my breakfast—three eggs, six rashers of bacon, toast and coffee."

The tramp looked her square in the eye and Mr.
Waddington noted with amazement that she had been beaten down.
"Yery well, walt out here. No, don't sit on that canyas chair. Use the Cape Cod chair. I can wipe it off later."

"That your woman?" asked the trainp as Mrs. Wadneston disappeared into the house. "Up, my wife."
"Dys like her?"
Mr. Waddington leaned his rake up against the eand considered the question. "No, by golly; no, I not."

"Why d'ya put up with her?"
"My friend, you apparently have never been mar-

"Huh, me? I married three and if I'm ever such a 'Huh, me? I married three and if I'm ever such a tomfool as to get me a fourth I'll walk off on her too.
I jest ain't domesteated, I guess... He grinned, his widely-spaced teeth gleaming in a friendly manner. "I do what I like when I like."

Mr. Waddington thrilled with the thought of such an unfettered life.
"What do you like to do most?"
"The tramp thought a moment. "Fish, I guess." he said. "Nothin like fishin. Of course, there's fishin an fishin. You take some of them guys up, at the Bay; they use a rod as big as a telephone pole and sinkers big enough to anchor the Queen Mary. But I'm tellin you—hey, what's your name, anyway? "Sam," said Roland Caylord Waddington. He liked the sound of Sam. A man named Sam could understand talk like his.
"Yeah, well. I'm tellin you, Sam, the most wonderful sport in the world is catchin' cohoe with light tackle and a bucktail fly."

TERACHED up to his battered hat and unbooked and passed it to Mr. Waddington.

"That's what you want to catch 'em with, Sam, a blue fly. Man, that sure is sport. Whyn'cha try it?"

Mrs. Waddington reappeared and set a tray disample. "Now many times have I told you not to come out in the wet grass in your house slippers? Go in this minute and get your shoes on, and mind you wipe your feet first. I could talk to you forever."

"Til bet you do, too." said the tramp. Mrs. Waddington glared and retreated into the house. Mr. Waddington glared and retreated into the house. Mr. Waddington glared and retreated into the house. Mr. Waddington reluckantly followed. He glanced back and the tramp called. "Tim stayin' the might with a codger lives in the Point Ellice cabins. A truck driver's givin me a lift to Cowchan in' the mornin'. Pick me up if you want to go. Jest ask for the tramp."

"Now," said Mrs. Waddington when Mr. Waddington had finished stuffing newspaper into the damp toe of his slippers. "You can go down the basement and get the canner. I'm going to bottle the fish while it's freeh."

"All of it?"

"Of course, all of it."

"Of course, all of it."

"Roland, you know perfectly well that we always have roast on Sunday."

Yes, he knew perfectly well they always had there of Sunday. And they always had their daughters, Ada and Gertrude, with their husbands, in to help eat it. Ada was snivelly and Gertrude whined and his doughfaced sons-in-law discussed the high cost of living. Mr. Waddington hated Sunday dinner. He could hear the buzz of Mrs. Waddington's voice. "If you don't like the way! I plan the meals, you can always hire a cook. I'm sure."

He signed. "All right, all right, it's your fish. Do what you like with it."

my friend insisted rather pointedly.

"No, thanks."

With that my friend did a little rapid calculation and then, nate and of enging the customer $1.50 for the prescription as he had planned to do, he said. "That will be $4."

The customer handed over the money without a murmur. A year or so later, my friend was in the store. It was late at night when the door opened and the same customer.

There was only one place I could have got them and that was here. I must have put them in my pocket by mistake. I live in the other end of town and this is the first time I've been able to get back here."

With that, the man dug into his pocket and pad for the cigarettes. The question is: Did he really intend to steal the cigarettes and, when he got home, suffer a year? Or was it a genuine case of error? Incidentally, what about the storekeeper? For your information, he did not hand back the original overcharge. How honest was he?

What appears more to the point is, How honest are you? Or I? By honest, I mean, How do you react to those situations which are borderline on the edge of outright theft, yet are not felonious? Overcharge at the bank: undercharge at a store: weaseling at

To get some idea of what other people do I did a little 'checking. The record, I am sorry to say, shows that most people (even as you and I) have a little farenty in their souls. Though psychologists have been fascinated by the subject of honesty for many years, they have, strangely enough, done almost no work on it. They appear to be unable to figure out a way of getting at the problem—what they call a point of attack. One member of the McGill University Department of Psychology said he recently had an inquiry along these lines from a colleague, and was abashed to discover nothing of value either at McGill or Harvard University

If talked to a number of storekeepers. Stores rarely have anyone come back to report having been undercharged or overchanged. A chap I know was telling me how he had gone into a store to buy a pack of playing cards. The price was $1.79, and he picked up the pack, took a bill out of his pocket and watted to be served. But the salesgirl appeared too busy to look after him. The longer he waited, the more impatient he became. Finally, the girl turned to him, grabbed the pack and the bill owns a $1 note. Before he could explain, the girl returned, handed him his wrapped package and some turned, handed him his wrapped package and some change, and marched away. She had charged him 79 cents instead of $1.79. What did he do? He went home mutering to himself about the service. But he kept the extra buck.

They also lose vacuum botles and pictures off the walls. The people who take them would be outraged to be accused of theft. One woman wrote back after a short stay at the Mount Royal: "I forgot to take one of your cute trays. Please send me one."

Some offenders are overtaken by remorps many months later. This accounts for the odd amounts of "conscience money" which reach railroad offices and the income-tax officials. Thus, one man who sent in some money to title Department of National Revenue, wrote: "Now I shall be able to sleep at night." Another sent in his money and noted feelingly: "Why should I make myself a crook for a dollar and a half?" Banks, in final analysis, are the most frequent victims of this type of dishonesty. "The crux of these cases," a bank official told me,
"is that certain people take the attitude that the bank

That appears to be the general attitude in most of VERY once in a while you hear of the unwanted child. By this generally is meant the child whose parents don't want him (or her). They never did. Nothing is wrong with the child except the accident of birth. Much is wrong with his parents. ly, this child is rare, but other unwanted child who

We all know at least one such child we never want to see again, possibly five or 10. Perhaps the parents bring him to call. He is into everything, pulling draperies to the floor, banging on table tops with vises, anatching toys from the other children; his parents sit bithely and admiringly by and either ignore him or smile proudly.

have in public. They want to be asked back. They want to be liked.

Can you correct this visiting angel?

Not on your life. Not if his parents are along. You grif your teeth and bear it. Dare to murmur some little nothing about 'perhaps the children would rather go outdoors and elimb trees" and the eyebrows raised at you almost hit the ceiling. Dare to suggest that he, little unwanted, stop pulling hairs out of the cat's tail and you are told. "Oh, Junior won't hurt the cat. He lore animals." If the cut returns Junior's demonstrated affection by scratching him, you are lectured on how dangerous it is to have cats in the same house with children.

Or perhaps this precious angel He is old enough to know better.

But he doesn't. Neither in public nor

"My mother lets me!" You rarely dare, anyway, for fear he will go home and tell his mother and for some reason you don't want her to think you an old crab. Your due recourse is to say to yourself. "That child will never be invited to this

THESE children aren't babies. They are old enough to know better. They are five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10. Other children have learned consideration, courtesy, and general decount (in public) by this time. Why haven't they? They are pathetic because in time they themselves realize something is wrong. In time they sense that no, one wants them. Other children will tell them frankly. My mother doesn't want you around. She says you don't know how to behave." Then, because everyone wants to be liked (life of the party, junior division), they generally try to conform. Usually it is far too late. The dog save himself a bad name.

The most sensible paint you can buy-Fast-drying, washable, easy to apply

You can paint a room like this in 3 hours with PITTSBURGH RUBBERIZED SATIN FINISH

Repainting a living room used to be quite a chore if you did it yourself. But this remarkable new paint offers a ready-made answer. If you're fussy about results yet not an experienced painter, Pittsburgh Rubberized Satin Finish

The one basic difference that makes all the difference between rubberized and oil paints is this: rubberized paint has a rubber rather than an oil base. It dries to the touch in=15 minutes. And this makes it possible to paint any room in an afternoon and enjoy your fresh, new surroundings that same evening!

Anyone can paint with Pittsburgh Rubberized. It's that easy—"like stroking a wall with a dry brush." Pittsburgh Rubberized gives you a smooth even surface without streaking or brush marks. If you miss a spot when painting, or the surface is marred later on, just touch it up with a brush. The spots won't show. And your husband will be glad to know that Pittsburgh Rubberized comes "ready to paint." You never use turps; if the paint needs thinning, you simply add water!

Since there are no paint oils, there is no paint odor. And once applied, this paint is washable. In fact, it can be scrubbed again and again without fading or harming the surface. Now, after the painting's done the "clean-up" job is simple. Hands and brushes come clean in a jiffy with warm water and soap.

As for cost, rubberized paint for the room above runs about $13.00. Its stough, washable surface stands up to wear and tear almost indefinitely. And because it's so easy to use, most home decorators feel they're money ahead in the long run.

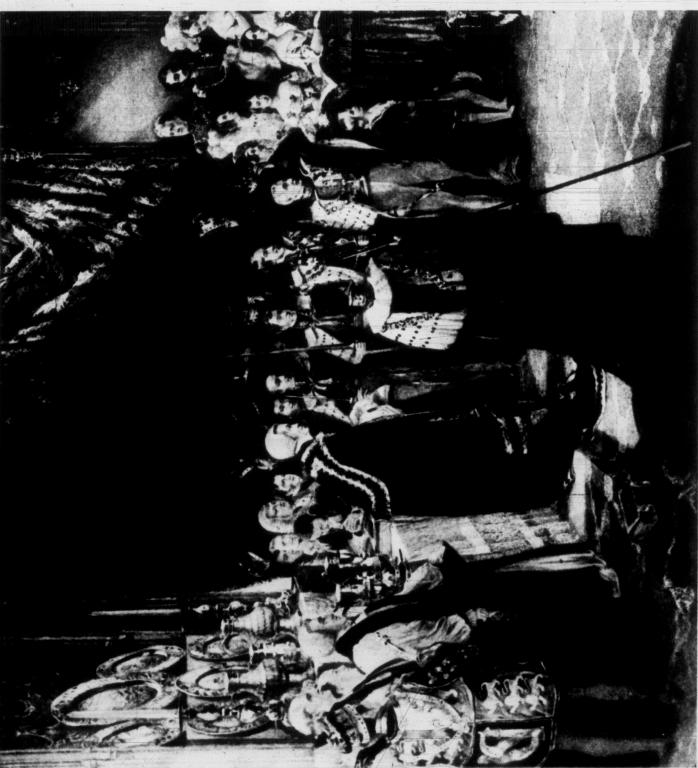

What about colors? This year, Pittsburgh has a new Take-Home Color Selector featuring 147 wonderful colors to choose from (see coupon below). With this book, you can choose your colors in your own home where you can match them with your furniture and drapes. Your Pittsburgh Paint Dealer will advise you on mixing colors, quantity of paint and the cost for the rooms you want to paint. You'll find his address in the yellow pages of telephone directory.

RONATION

Among the thousands of accounts of coronations that have been written, one stands out. It is told by the central figure in the great ceremony, Queen Victoria uses only 19 when she was rounded on June 28, 1838. Her impressions, as she confided them to her journal after the event, may well prove some insight into the feelings of another young queen, her great-great-granddaughter, on her coronation day.

I went to Westminster Abbey to see all the preparations for to-morrow. The streets were full of people, and preparations of all kinds.

I was received at the Abbey by Lord Melbourne (the Prime, Minister), the Duke of Norfolk, Sir William Woods, and Sir Benjamin Stevenson. The whole thing is beautifully and splendidly and very conveniently done. Lord Melbourne made me try the various thrones (that is, two) which was very fortunate, as they were both too low.

I came home again as I went (crowds in the streets and all so friendly) at 5. The preparations for Fairs, Balloons, etc., in the Farks, quile changes all, and the encampments of the Artillery, with all their white tents, has a very pretty effect. I did not think Lord Melbourne looking well, though he said he was better. I'm very glad I went to the Abbey, as I shall now know exactly where I'm to go, and be. The Duchess of Sutherland came to ask for further Orders a few minutes after I had got home, and said she had taken Lord Melbourne in her carriage to Downing Street which is only one step from the Abbey. He walked to the Abbey. Wrote my journal. At ½ past I we dined.

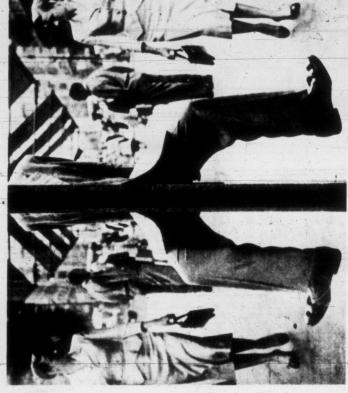

by the guns in the Park, and could not get much sleep afterwards on account of the noise of the people, bands, etc., etc.

Got up at 7 feeling strong and well; the Park presented a curious spectacle; crowds of people up to Constitution Hill. Solders, Bands, etc. I dressed, havings taken a little breakfast before I dressed, and a little after.

At is past 9 I went into the next room dressed exactly in my House of Lords costume; and met Uncle Ernest (Duke of Cumberland), Peodore and Charles (Victoria's half-sister and half-brother) who had come a few minutes before into my dressing-room, Lady Normanby, the Duchess of Sutherland, and lady Barham, all in their robes.

At 10 I got into the State Coach with the Duchess of Sutherland and Lord Albemarle, and we began our Progress. It was a fine day, and the crowds of people exceeded what I have ever seen; many as there were firing of the guns, all at the same instant, rendered the spectacle most imposing.

The Enthronization and the Homage of, 1st all the Bishops, then my Uncles, and lastly of all the Peers, in their respective order, was very fine. The Duke of Norfolk tholding for me the Screpte with 3 Cross) with Lord Melbourne, stood close, to me on my right, and the Duke of Richmond with the other Sceptre on my left. All my Train-bearers standing behind the Throne.

Poor old Lord Rolle, who is $2 and dreadfully infirm, in attempting to ascend the steps, fell and rolled quite down, but was not the least hurt; when he attempted to reascend them I got up and advanced to the end of the steps, in order to prevent another fall.

WHEN Lord Melbourne's turn to do Homage came, there Duke of Wellington: it's a pretty ceremony; they first all touch the Crown, and then kiss my hand.

When my good Lord Melbourne knelt down and kissed my hand, he pressed my hand and I grasped his with all my heart; at which he looked up with eyes filled with tears and seemed much touched, as he was, I observed throughout the whole ceremony.

After the Homage was concluded I left the Throne, took off my Crown and received the Sacrament. I then put on my Grown again, and re-ascended the Throne, leaning on Lord Melbourner's arm; at the commencement of the Anthem I descended from the Throne, and went into St. Edward's Chapel with my Ladies, Train-bearers, and Lord Willoughby, where I took off the Dalmatte robe, Supertunder, and put on the Purple Velvet Kirtle and Mandle, and proceeded again to the Throne, which I ascended leaning on Lord Melbourne's Interval another present at this ceremony, in the box immediately above the Royal Box, and who witnessed all; it was lehnen (a former governess, now a lady-in-waiting), whose eyes I caught when on the Throne, and we exchanged smiles. She and Spath, Lady John Russell and Mr. Murray saw me leave the Palace arrive at the Abbey, leave the Abbey and again return to the Palace!

I then again descended from the Throne, and repaired with all the Peers bearing the Regalia, my Ladies and Train-bearers, to St. Edward's Chapel, as it is called; but which, as Lord Melbourne said, was more unlike a Châpel than anything he had ever seen: for what was called an Aldra's was covered with sandwiches, bottles of wine, etc.

The Archbishop came in and ought to have delivered the Orb to me, but I had already got it.

There we waited for some minutes; Lord Melbourne took a glass of whine, for he seemed completely thred; the Procession being formed, I replaced my Crown (which I had taken off for a few minutes), took the Orb in my left hand and the Seeptre in my right, and thus loaded proceeded through the Abbey, which resounded with cheers, to the first Robing-room, where I found the Duchess of Gloucester, Mamma and the Duchess of Canbhridge with their ladies.

And here we waited for at least an hour with all my ladies and Train-bearers; the Princesses went away about half an hour before I did: the Archbishop had (most awkwardiy) put the ring on the wrong finger, and the consequence was that I had the greatest difficulty to take it off again.—

which I at last did with greak pain. Lady Fanny, Lady Wilhelmina, and Lady Mary Grumston looked quite beautiful.

Deautiful.

At about ½ past 4 I re-entered my carriage, the Crown on my head and Sceptre and Orb in my hand, and we proceeded the same way as we came — the crowds if possible having increased.

The enthusiasm, affection and loyalty was really touching, and I shall ever remember this day as the proudest of my life. I came home at a little after 6—really not feeling tired. At 8 was dined. Besides we 13, Lord Melbourne and Lord Surrey dined here. Lord Melbourne came up to me and said. "I must congratulate you on this most brilliant day." and that all had gone so well. He said he had not I sat between Uncle Ernest and Lord Melbourne, and Lord Melbourne between me and Feodore, whom he had led in. My kind Lord Melbourne was much affected in speaking of the whole ceremony.

He asked kindly if was tired; said the Sword he carried (the 1st, the Sword of State) was excessively heavy. I said that the Crown hurt me a good deal.

He was much amused at Uncle Ernest's being astonished at our still having the Lidan; we agreed that the whole thing was a very fine sight. He thought the robes, and particularly the Dalmatic, "looked remarkably well."

He went out of the house into the hot sunshine. He squinted his eyes against its brightness, and looked out over the stretch of caim, sparkling water. The high blue sky rolled down to meet the water without a break—not a cloud was in sight. The heat in the stubby grass rose up to burn his feet through the soft rubber shoes he wore. A great day for a birthday. An ache weiled up in him as he an toward the wharf.

He hitched his jeans over his slim young hips and leaped into the bone. He worked quickly, flercely, trying to ease the palff in his heart. There wasn't much water and the bucket kept scraping along the bottom. He felt a satisfaction from the grating noise.

Stephane sat down on an empty fish cask, swinging her heels rhythmically against its side. "Aren't you going to wish me a happy birthday?" she asked. He banged the thwart into place without speaking. "Dad says I can visit with you while he goes on to see old Mrs. Peters." There was a pause. "I got lots of presents," she said. There was a pause. "I got lots of presents," she said. There was a pause. "I got lots of presents, she said. There was a pause. "I got lots of presents, and a stone from the bottom of the boat and hammered a thole pin deeper into the guinwale. "Only I dion't get the thing I wanted most." "What was that?" he asked.

CHE didn't answer, and he looked up at her. She was smiling, but her eyes were red with recent weeping. Yesterday's emotions stirred inside him. He hitched his jeans again and Elimbed up on the wharf. He sat beside her on the casks.

"Hard to get everythin'," he said. "Was it somethin in Godfrey's store".

"On, no. Nothing like that. This was a special thing—extra-special. It hurt more'n anything when my dad said he didn't have time." She looked away from him. "I cried" she admitted in a sudden burst of confidence. "I couldn't help it." She looked away of confidence. "I couldn't help it."

"Girls cry too easy," he said, shaking his head. "But you shouldn't have cried on your birthday. What was it you wanted that's so extra-special."

Robbie was on his feet. There might be misery and grief in the world, but there was also light and love and laughter. His voice rang with the sudden upsurge of joy in him.

"Sure is funny." he said. "Sure is funny."

He was no longer a bony little boy in Jeans and a cotton shirt. He was a prince with a prize gift to lay at the feet of his lady. With a lordly gesture he untied the painter and drew the boat close to the wharf. "Climb aboard. Stephanle." he said. "Climb aboard an get a real birthday present. — a birthday present from Robbie Burton. — even though it ain't got any fancy paper and string."

"I'm sorry." he said. "I sneaked it out of the drawer, but I was goin' to put it back now. Only I've messed it up. I'm sorry. Sis—honest!"
"You should have asked. Anyway, what do you want with a silk scar??
Turning sissy or something?"

"Sure. I mean, girls're all right. Nothin' the matter with girls."

He saw a tear roll down her cheek, and he squirmed uncomfortably on the rail. He wondered what he should say.

"I'm giad you're a girl, Stephanle." he repeated lamely.

Her father came out of the house and she jumped off the fence. "I'll come again tomorrow." she called as she drove away with him.

DOBBIE sat on the fence for a long time and thought about her, and there was a strange new sense of light and laughter in him. Tomornow was her birthday and he must give her a present. He sat for a long time pondering over a gift—a gift he would wrap in fancy paper and the with silvery string. And all that night the thought of her was part of him, even while he siept.

He pulled out the last drawer and pushed his hand beneath the pink sweater neatly folded over the top. He wouldn't do it this way—without asking Sis—but he couldn't let on to her or anyone how he felt about Stephanie. His fingers felt something soft, and a silky thread caught in the rough edge of his thumbnall. He pulled, and a shimmering blue silk square lay in his hand.

He whistled softly. This was it! Shimmering and blue like the sky's reflection in the sea on a windless day; soft and dainty like Stephanie herself. He remembered the sear. It had come in the last parel Aunt Jane had sent from the States. That made it all right—almost. The parcels were meant for all of them. Quickly he stuffed the sear inside his white cotton shirt. He'd get paper and string at Godfrey's store. He had a quarter tied in the corner of a handkerchief in his Sunday suit. His hands nonchalantly stuffed into the pockets of his jeans, he walked downstairs and into the hot kitchen.

SIS was bent over the stove, stirring something. She wiped her damp or forehead with the corner of her apron, and looked at him. He puckered his mouth into a whistle and turned away.

"Take the dimner in to Pop. son." his mother said. "I'll be along to prop him up in a minute."

Carefully he carried the tray to the parior, where his father lay on the bed that had been hastily made up two days ago when he'd tripped and fallen over the stagehead.

"Thanks, Robbie." His mother was there to take the tray from him, and to fix the pullows in a deep white pile behind his father's back.

"You're a good help, son," she added.

"Of course he is," his father said warmly. "Robbie's always been a Robbie felt his throat tighten. He looked away quickly.

"Don't know what we'd do without you," his father continued. "After you've had your dinner, ball the water out of the small punt. She got too dry this summer. Could do with a mite of caulkin, I low. Not bad enough to hurt her yet, though. An' Robbie, you can go out in her if you want. Do you good." His father's hand patted his shoulder

"Yes. run along an' have yourself some fun, Robbie," his mother said. "I'll send Stephanie down to the wharf if she comes with the doctor."

HE tried to see her face but she was leaning too far over the bed. He wondered if she knew about the scarf that lay back to the kit-

anything at Godfreys."

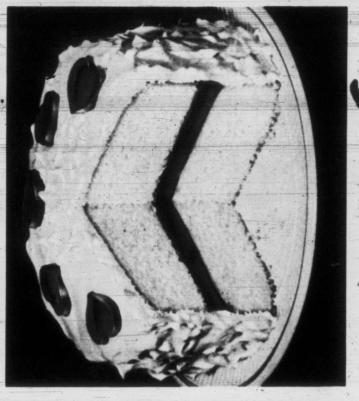

He traced the pattern on the worn tab le olicioth with his fork. "Robbie's always been a good boy." His father's words of hurn ed around and around in his mind. A good boy! We'll, he was, wasn't he? He kept the got kindling, he kept the woodpox filled. He even weeded the garden and fed the hens? He pushed his hair back from his eyes with a deflate gesture. After all, he had as much right to the searf as Sis. His aimt had sent it. It just so happened he wasn't a girl and so hadn't nneeded it, but now he needed it, so he had a right to take it.

The heat from the kitchen store seemed suddenly to belch out at him. The silk searf stuck to his body. He puilled at the front of his shirt. A corner of blue silk stuck out where the shirt gaped. He glanced up at his sister. She stood at the window, he had to work him. He couldn't do it. Not now, when it came right down to it—not to Sis. He drew the searf from his shirt. It was damp from his body was and limp like a dead thing. He stared at it in consternation.

"Sis, I've—I've spoiled your blue scarf." he faltered.
"Robbie," she turned on him sharply, and he flinched from her. A b broke in his throat.

ULLTERS from every province have been busily stitching for many months preparing for a national competition. Even in these mechanical days, the ladies like to show their prowess with a needle.

In dozens of branches of the Women's Institute, the Tweedsmuir Cup competition is an important event. Three cups are presented blennially for work in three different fields: essay-writing, local history books and handicrafts. Lady Tweedsmuir, during her stay in Canada, while her hussband was Governor - General, became interested in Women's Institute work and organized the competition.

The handicraft project is different each term, and for the 1951-53 event a quilt of original Canadian design has been choosen. The best one in the country will be on display in Tweedermuir Cup.

Rules of the contest are strict. Quilts must be a group effort and must have been made during the biennial term 1951-53. The design must be original, hemmed or buttonholed, and hand-quilted. Quilts must be light in weight; made of cotton material, from 80 to 90 inches wide, and 108 inches in length. Points are awarded for general appearance. Originality and suitability of design; oolor and workmanship. Most points are given for workmanship.

Eliminations for the cup begin at district level in all provinces. The winners are then entered in a larger competition, the convention area. In Ontario there are 109 districts, although all did not enter the quilting contest. Thirteen areas competed in Ontario for the convention area honors, and from these the winners were chosen to enter their quilts in the prowincial contest in January.

Three winners of the provincial contest in Ontario will be in the national competition for the cup.

Designs most popular with quilters were maple leaves and the trillium. Ontario's floral symbol. There was an amusting cartoon of women having tea. a map of Manitoulir Island worked in soft blues and greens, and a quilt displaying the emblems of each province. Mottos, such as "For Home and Country" were also favorites.

Most groups will sell the quilts and turn the money into the treasury of their local branch. A hand-made quilt usually sells for about $35.

There are, however, four African and three Asiatic species of the pangolin, and the one pictured here is found in India and Ceylon. It has a long, ribbonlike tongue covered with a sticky fluid which helps it to collect ants. It is covered with large, overlapping, horny scales, except on the underside of the body, the inside of the legs and the lower part of the tail's tip.

The animal, which has an exceptionally keen sense of smell, gives off an offensive odor. It usually reaches a length of about 3½ feet. There are five toes with claws on each foot. The claws are used to uncover anthulis. The pangolin walks with the long claws of its forefeet closed so the backs of the digits touch the ground.

From the orthopaedic angle, it is emphasized that during the grade-school period of a boy's life, there is only partial ossification of bones, with a healing hazard after injury to the epiphyses (growth area of the bones). It is also a time when the boy is particularly vulnerable to joint injuries and since bones and muscle develop in accordance with the work they do a program of wide range is vastly preferable to specializing in one type of sport.

Now, what about the mental angle of high-pressure sports' influence on the pre-teen-ager?

Biddy Baskethall, backed by responsible civic organizations and beamingly encouraged by proud parents with the full publicity treatment, eeen automatically to be right as rain. And in common with other sports scribes feroes Canada, I have been swinging along with the popular trend that this well-planned, well-backed, pre-teen-ager competition is "great stuff for the kids."

But there is opposition that can no longer be ignored building up against the viewpoint. Some critical queries can be answered with a 50-50 chance of satisfying the asker. For instance:

"Are we creating super-stars at 12 who might be office boys at 149."

"Are we creating little Caesars in sport by painting maturity on kids?"

"Are we neelecting the many to glorify a few?"

But when doctors get into the argument I experience qualms.

It started one day last summer when I found myself plumb in the middle of the Canadian Medical Association's convention at the Banff Springs Hotel. At that time fiftle League Baseball was being spoilighted across the country, and the subject came up informally around the swimming pool.

It astonished me to note how little enthusiasm was shown by the medicos. There was doubt expressed at the wisdom of "placing immature children in an adult program." There was agreement that the young boy needs plenty of activity, but it was stressed that such activity should be "free from pressures and tensions." Finally, it was pointed out that while vigorous sames are part of a desirable playground program, they are conducted "within the range of intensity".

years, and they may well be so regarded because of the slow development of the heart."

Now, from a member of the University of Toronto's faculty of medicine, comes a rather shaking continuation of that thought in the form of a report coincilled by Forda State College:

"When playing football or basketball in a natural social attuation, the child quits when he feels tirred. No amount of persuasion by the group of children can prevail upon the tirred child to go back into the game until he feels like being active again. However, under conditions artificially stimulated, he is not even aware of the conditions artificially stimulated, he is not even aware of the condition artificially stimulated, he is not even activity beyond the time when he should be resting, so greatly needed for the high metabolic processes going of caretise by changing rules good of a spid trimming playing space. puts it on a commonplace level:

"The degree of glamor, publicity and bis-time setting which an average, immature, young boy can stand and remain an unspoiled youngster is a matter each parent is best able to judge."

But, diging more deeply, you run into the touchy subject of emotional development. There are psychiatrists today who point out that, instead of teaching children to control their emotions, the excessive ten-sion of high-pressure midget sport threatens emotional imbalance, because the experiences are too severe in the "big-time" setting. And even when outward expressions are under control, how can we be certain that the strain isn't merely being transferred into abnormal internal processes?

But Browne, who works for the Customs and Excise branch of the National Revenue Department as Canada's official tea taster, goes through tens of thousands of cups every year.

He spends his days making, sniffing and savoring teas. Every shipment to reach Canada is held in bond until Browne gives it his approval. Or he pens in red a notation't teame.

He may make additional tests with the wet leaves if he requires further information. When he is satisfied, he writes the notation on a form which enables the shipment to continue on its way to Canadian kitchens, or prevents it from doing so.

If from ooning so, it from ooning so, it from ooning so, it from oon so ittle about the tea they drink. It has been a most popular beverage ever since it was introduced here by the Hudson's Bay Co. in 1715. Canadians consume their full quota of the world's annual consumption of 300,000,000,000 cups.

Browne cites Britain's Prime Minister Winston Churchill chooses his tea to suit the time of day. For example, in the afternoon, he drinks Souchons, a China tea cured by a smoking process. He might drink another warlety if offered but he probably would not like it.

The tea taster is also responsible for selecting the tea used by the armed forces. There are, however, no fixed standards for tea as there are for many other products. Accordingly, he recommends what, to his expert taste, are really fine teas. But nothing displeases Browne so much as to see good tea being spoiled in the making. To him the use of sugar is a crime.

He believes the only way to drink teals clear. The fat in cream completely changes the flavor of tea. Reluciantly he states that if tea must be adulterated in this-fashion, a little plain milk only should be used.

and abilities—from a drama group and a club in creative writing to a choral society and a school band.

Has this new approach to education paid dividends?

"We're still in the transition stage, and it's too early to tell." says educator Unsworth. "Perhaps in some cases the pendulum has swing too far toward the practical and the makerial outlook, and if it has we'll make adjustments. But at least we know that the old method was incomplete and that today children like going to school."

One apparent result, judging from West Hill, is that the cheerful, modern school also comes equipped with built-in winderselver now show up in classes with pressed trousers and the and jacket.

N MODERN education the old-fashioned blackboard is vanishing. Its place is being taken by a greenboard and yellow chalk — a combination that cuts down glare and saves the student's eyesight.

But the transition is more than stin-deep, as many a startied parent has suddenly realized. "In my time," the adult is inclined to say. "I went to school and I was told what subjects to study, and no nonzense about it."

Today? Johnny comes home clutching not only his textbooks but the idea that school need not be severe and dull. He is taught that self-reliance will equip him for society's demands: he is given moderate freedom to choose academic subjects closely allied to his own tastes and talents. Regimentation, at least in most Canadian high schools, is a thing of the present it is only in the last 10 years that the most obvious changes—both in improved teaching methods and better buildings—have been made. Some of the changes are due to the educations wareness that the tension of our times is having a marked effect on upcoming generations. Some boil down to the realization that not everyone is equipped to go on to university—that if a boy hasn't the makings or inclination of a doctor or lawyer he's better off with a grounding for the business or technical world.

Other changes can be traced directly to the home, where impatient parents, busy with other pursuits, have neglected to pass on the simple lessons in utility which their own parents had taught them. A surprising number of girls, for instance, are finding in home-economics courses that there is a right and a wrong way to make a bed.

But beyond the strictly functional side, education generally is more attimulating and palabable. Even in elementary schools, where all children must take the same basic subjects, visual aids add a new attractiveness. Special movies and recordings brighten such courses as history and geography. Pupils leave their classrooms for excursions to dairies, factories and other points of interest. Enlightened (seahers shuin yesterday's stern, uncompromising aloofness. COME educators and parents frown on the new trend, saying it neglecks discipline and tolerates an abnormal use of freedom, bordering on licence.

In defence, Leohard Unsworth, a Montreal educator with so pears of experience, says: "Education in the past was too bookish, too narrow. It didn't bring out the versatility that is in every child. Today we look after individual differences.
As for discipline, parents as well as teachers know it's a horthile word. It implies the old, corporal form of punishment.
Now were trying, to instill self-discipline and its meaning—something; that comes from within rather than from the outside. We're getting away from the idea of authoritarianism.
We're trying, to show that freedom and liberty have to be earned, and they can be earned only through a child's own efforts.

Unsworth is principal of Montreal's new West Hill High School, a building inhat emphasizes dramatically that, just as educational methods have changed, so have the physical facilities. Throughout Canada, wherever new schools are springing up, the dim, dark, dank halls of yesterday are giving way to wide, pastel-toned corridors with asphalt-tiled foors that murific echo. Stuffy dreary classrrooms are being replaced by summy airy ones. Cellings are sound-absorbent, and walls are light green, yellow and blue. The modern school avoids the institutional, uniform look. Color schemes vary from room to room, so that students are safeguarded from room to room, so that students are asfeguarded for any faith.

West Hill High School represents the latest in today's conception of combining 20th-Century materials with grace and durability to make schools as pleasant and practical as possalted by 15-year-old Anna Christie (whose picture appears

As a life-long admirer of Cadborosaurus, your friendly sea-serpent, I feel highly indignant over reports emanating from Qualicum Beach.

These reports state that a sea-animal about 10 feet long, with a neck only two feet long, has been sighted, andthat observers believe it to be Caddy.

I submit it is an insult to call a 10-foot animal Caddy.

Caddy has not been that small for 50 years. He is now a grown box.

It is all right for Qualicum Beach to have its own marine tourist attraction, but do not go around calling it Caddy.

On Sunday night, "Stage 53" revives Len Peterson's adaptation of Henrik Ibsen's power-ful play about a rich man's fear of retribution for his hard, calculating treatment of others in "The Master Builders" which was a highlight "Stage 49" season.

Of a mystic nature, the play symbolizes the conflict between man's conscience and his greed, and points out some of the exils which Ibsen felt were eating the brotherhood of man out of society It will be heard on CBU at 6.

Rebel Randall's special Valentine's Day show on her "America Calling" program, Sun-day on KIRO at 3, will be studded with top-flight guests, Rosemary Clooney, Peggy Lee, Margaret Whiting, Joe Stafford and many others.

The program will salute the women in the services. Rebel's phone call is from Pte. Edward Kelly. Seoul, Korea, to his fiancee, Doris Recording star Webb Pierce will be Red Foley's guest on "Grand Ole Opry" tonight at 7.30 on KOMO.

NUMBERING OF BUILDINGS By law No. 990, finally passed by the Municipal Council on the 26th day of January, 1953, requires the owner of every building other than outbuildings, to affix a street number to such building not later than the 27th day of March, 1953. In the event that the building is a greater distance than 50 feet from the street, or is obscured by a hedge or fence, a duplicate street number shall be affixed at the entrance from the street.

The correct number may be obtained from the office of the Municipal Engineer, Royal Oak, Telephone G 9321 or Colquitz 91.

When asking for a street number, the legal description of the property must be given, and in the case of a building on a large parcel of land, the location of the building on the lot must also be given. If the building is on a corner lot, the street upon which the building faces must be given. Any street numbers now in use which do not conform to the official street numbering plans must be changed upon written notice to do so. Rural mail box numbers cannot be used as building numbers. Failure to comply with any of the requirements of the said By-law No 990 will cause the owner to be liable to a fine of $10.00, and the continuance of any breach after conviction shall be deemed a new offence for each day the same continues, and shall be punishable accordingly.

Four men were sitting in the locker room of a country club after a game. Talk about golf scores drifted into a discussion of personal difficulties and problems. One man was especially despondent. The others, his friends, realizing his unhappy state of mind, had arranged this game to get his mind off his difficult situation. They hoped a few hours on the golf course might afford him some relief.
